Trade is the exchange of goods and services between countries. Imagine you are a buyer in a small village in the UK, and you want to buy a new toy. The toy is made in a factory in China. The factory in China is an example of an exporter because it sends the toys to other countries. The village in the UK is an example of an importer because it receives the toys from the factory in China. Trade helps countries to buy the goods they need and want. It also helps to create jobs and stimulate economies.
