

The Legend of the Sun-Stone

Learning objective: To retrieve information, make inferences and express personal opinions about a mythical narrative.

Read the story carefully and answer the questions below. Use full sentences where appropriate.

Long ago, before the first maps were drawn, the people of the Whispering Valley lived in darkness. The sun had hidden itself behind the jagged peaks of the Iron Mountains, refusing to warm the earth. Pip the caterpillar's ancestors told tales of a giant, glowing Sun-Stone that once rested in the valley's centre, providing endless light. They believed the stone had been stolen by a grumpy mountain giant who feared the bright rays. One brave traveller, armed only with a silver whistle and a pocketful of curiosity, climbed the perilous slopes. Upon reaching the summit, the traveller did not fight the giant. Instead, they played a gentle, rhythmic melody on the whistle. The giant, who had never heard music, wept tears of joy. Touched by the beautiful song, the giant returned the stone to the valley. As the Sun-Stone was placed back upon its pedestal, the valley bloomed with vibrant flowers and golden light. To this day, the villagers say that if you listen closely to the wind near the Iron Mountains, you can still hear the faint, melodic echo of the traveller's song.
