

Exploring the Regions of the United Kingdom

Join Finn the Dolphin on a grand tour across the United Kingdom—where will your journey take you?

- Why do the regions of the United Kingdom have such different landscapes? Consider the impact of mountains, coastal proximity, and human settlement patterns.
- How can we categorise a region as 'urban' or 'rural'? Think about the types of buildings, transport links, and land use you might find in each.
- In what ways does the climate change as you travel from the south of England to the north of Scotland?
- How do physical features, such as rivers and coastlines, influence where people choose to build large cities?
- Compare and contrast the geographical features of a mountainous region in Wales with a flat, low-lying agricultural region in East Anglia.

Did you know? Did you know? The United Kingdom is not just one big island! It is made up of four distinct countries: England, Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland. Each country is divided into regions that have their own special climates, traditions, and land features, from the craggy mountains of the Scottish Highlands to the bustling urban centres of South East England.
