

Discussion Texts: Exploring Both Sides

Dive into the Debate: Weigh the Facts and Find Your Voice!

- A discussion text must remain objective, using formal language to present different viewpoints without showing personal bias.
- The introduction should clearly state the topic or the question being discussed to orient the reader immediately.
- Each paragraph should focus on one main point, providing evidence or examples to support the specific argument being made.
- Use linking words such as 'furthermore', 'however', 'conversely', and 'on the other hand' to help the reader follow the flow of the argument.
- The conclusion provides a summary of the main points discussed and may offer a final thought or a recommendation based on the evidence.

Did you know? Did you know? A good discussion text doesn't just list facts; it acts like a scale! By presenting both the pros and the cons, you help the reader understand the full picture before they make up their own mind.
