On the fifth of November, Nova the owl perched high in the branches of the old oak tree. Below, the village was preparing for Bonfire Night. Nova watched as the villagers carefully built a large bonfire using dry wood and straw. As the sun set, the sky turned a deep, dusky purple. Suddenly, a bright orange flame licked at the wood, and the fire began to crackle. Nova hooted with delight as colorful fireworks whistled into the air, painting the night with dazzling shades of red, green, and gold. Children stood wrapped in thick, woolly scarves, holding glowing sparklers that left swirling patterns in the dark. It was a cold evening, but the heat from the bonfire kept everyone feeling warm and cosy. They were celebrating a tradition that had happened for many years. Nova loved watching the sparks dance like tiny stars against the dark night sky. It was the perfect time for an owl who loved to stargaze, as the night felt extra magical and bright.
