

Unlocking Life Stories: The Art of the Biography

Step into the spotlight: Discover how to map a life through the power of words!

- A biography is written in the third person, meaning the author acts as a detached observer describing the life of another individual.
- Events are typically organised in chronological order, guiding the reader from the subject's early life to their final achievements.
- Biographies often include 'retrospective' reflections, where the author explains how a past event shaped the person's future path.
- Primary sources, such as journals, letters, or interviews, are the essential building blocks for a credible and factual account.
- The purpose of a biography is to provide an objective insight into why a person is considered significant in history.

Did you know? Did you know? Biographies are not just lists of dates! They are carefully crafted narratives that bridge the gap between history and storytelling. Our friend Ellie the Elephant uses her incredible memory to ensure that every historical detail is accurate, while Leo the Lion ensures the writing flows with the rhythm of poetry to truly capture the subject's spirit.
