It was a chilly evening in November. Nova the owl sat on a high branch. She looked down at the park. Below, a large fire was burning. It was a Bonfire Night celebration. The flames were orange and yellow. They danced in the dark air. Nova heard a loud crackling sound. People stood in a circle to stay warm. Some children held a glowing sparkler in their hands. They moved them in circles to make golden patterns in the night sky. Nova watched the smoke curl up towards the stars. Everyone looked very happy. They cheered when a rocket zoomed up high and burst into tiny, colorful lights. It was a very loud and busy night. Nova liked the bright colors. She tucked her head under her wing and felt glad that the fall air was filled with such joy. She thought about how the fire kept everyone cosy while they watched the display. It was a night to remember.
