Max the monkey visited the town Christmas market. The stalls were decorated with bright tinsel and twinkling lights. Max loved the festive atmosphere. He had £5.00 in his pocket to buy a special gift for his friend, Pip. Max walked past a stall selling hot chestnuts for £2.00. Then, he saw a beautiful, hand-made bookmark for £1.50. Max stopped to calculate his spending. If he bought the bookmark, he would have £3.50 left. He decided that Pip would love the bookmark because Pip is a bookworm. Max bought the bookmark and felt very happy. As he walked home, he saw a shivering kitten near the gate. Max felt sorry for the kitten, so he spent his remaining £3.50 on a warm, woolly blanket for it. He did not have any money left for a snack, but he felt warm inside because he had been generous. Max knew that giving to others was the best part of Christmas.
