

Mastering Non-Chronological Reports with Pip

Explore, Explain, and Excite: Become a Report Expert!

- Non-chronological reports are written to provide information about a specific subject, animal, or place using clear, factual language.
- Use sub-headings to organize your writing into clear categories, making it easy for the reader to find specific facts.
- Always write in the third person (using pronouns like he, she, it, or they) to keep your report objective and professional.
- Include a labelled diagram or a picture with a caption to help the reader visualise the subject you are describing.
- Stick to the present tense, as you are describing facts that are true right now, rather than telling a story about the past.
- Add a glossary at the end to define any technical or difficult vocabulary, ensuring your report is accessible to everyone.

Did you know? Did you know? A non-chronological report doesn't have to be read in order! Because it explores a topic rather than a timeline, you can jump straight to the section that interests you most, just like Pip the caterpillar choosing which leaf to nibble on next.
