Ellie the elephant loves to dig up history. One sunny afternoon, she walked across a grassy field in Britain. She felt something hard under her trunk. She brushed away the soil and gasped! It was a beautiful mosaic floor made of tiny, colored tiles. Ellie knew she had found a Roman villa. Long ago, the Romans invaded Britain and changed how people lived. They built straight roads that crossed the country and created busy towns. Roman people liked to be comfortable. In their villas, they had special floors that stayed warm in winter. They also built large public baths where they could wash and chat with friends. Many people in Britain started to use Roman coins, like the denarius, to buy food and goods. Ellie looked at the patterns in the tiles. She imagined the Roman family who lived there centuries ago. They would have walked on these very tiles to eat their dinner. It was like stepping back in time. Ellie felt lucky to find this secret piece of the past hidden right beneath her feet.
