In the mid-20th century, the United States faced a period of intense struggle for Civil Rights. At that time, many states practiced legal segregation, where people were separated based on the colour of their skin. This meant that public facilities, such as schools, buses, and parks, were often divided, with facilities for Black citizens frequently being of a much lower quality. Ellie, who loves history, explains that this was a time of great unfairness and systemic discrimination.

Courageous activists, including Dr Martin Luther King Jr. and Rosa Parks, led peaceful protests to demand equality. They believed in the power of non-violent action to change laws and minds. Their persistence helped to highlight the injustice of the system to the entire world. Eventually, their efforts led to landmark changes, such as the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which outlawed discrimination based on race, colour, religion, or national origin. This movement serves as an important reminder that standing up for what is right, even when it is difficult, is essential for building a fair and just society for everyone.
