Uncovering Our Local Social Studies / History with Ellie the Elephant

Be a Social Studies / History Detective: Explore the Past Beneath Your Feet!

- Local history helps us understand how our community has changed over time, including how buildings, industries, and transport have evolved since the Victorian era.
- Primary sources are original items from the period being studied, such as handwritten letters, maps, or even local gravestones, which provide first-hand evidence.
- Secondary sources, like history books or documentaries, interpret information from the past to help us put individual events into a wider context.
- The census is a brilliant tool for local historians; it is an official count of the population that has been taken every ten years since 1801, revealing details about jobs and families.
- Archaeological finds, such as pottery shards or old tools discovered in local soil, can tell us about how people lived in our area thousands of years ago.
- Oral histories involve interviewing older members of the community to record their personal memories, ensuring that recent local heritage is preserved for the future.

Did you know? Did you know? Ellie the Elephant has an incredible memory, but even she needs help remembering the past! Historians use 'primary sources' like old photographs, birth certificates, and local newspapers found in archives to piece together the story of a town, rather than just relying on stories passed down through time.
